WH...
WHERE ARE WE,
PLAS?

A LONG WAY
IN THE FUTURE,
WOODY! IT'S THE
YEAR FOUR MILLION
A.D.!

From the earth's dim future he came! His name is UNO, and he is the last man on earth!

What is UNO'S strange mission in the year 1949? Only PLASTIC MAN and the underworld's ruthless killer, THE RATTLER, know the answer!

PLASTIC MAN

Who was, perhaps, the most important funeral in the history of the world...

NOW THERE IS NO ONE LEFT! THE PLAGUE HAS TAKEN THEM ALL! I AM UTTERLY ALONE!

JUST TWO YEARS AGO THIS CITY HUMMED WITH LIFE! HOW EMPTY IT SEEMS NOW! ONLY THE ECHO OF MY OWN FOOT- STEPS IN THE SILENCE!

I'M THE LAST MAN ON EARTH! WHEN I DIE, MANKIND WILL HAVE PERISHED! ALL OUR ACHIEVEMENTS WILL CRUMBLE INTO DUST AND BE FORGOTTEN!

BUT WHY SHOULD I LET IT HAPPEN? THERE IS SOMETHING I CAN DO! I CAN BRING OTHER HUMAN BEINGS FROM A DIFFERENT AGE TO COLONIZE THE EARTH OF THIS DAY!

I'LL SET THE CONTROLS FOR 1949! HISTORY SAYS THAT THE PEOPLE OF THAT REMOTE, PRIMITIVE AGE WERE ADVENTUROUS! THEY LOVED EXCITEMENT AND DANGER, SO THEY'LL MAKE PERFECT RECRUITS!

In the year 1949, this scene of adventure, excitement and danger represents the last stand of THE RATTLER, vicious gangland ruler...

HERE HE COMES!

YIIII!

A Solvent Solution

JUST as he was about to grab the trio of thugs leaving the bank Plastic Man collapsed on the marble floor. "I can't go any farther," he gasped.

Frantically Woozy raced outside and hailed a passing motorist. After what seemed like hours to the distressed little man his rubbery friend was finally installed in the emergency ward of City Hospital.

White-gowned, masked surgeons stood helplessly by as the wounded Plas, with numerous holes in his chest, struggled to breathe.

"I know of no treatment we can give him," said one of the doctors sadly. "It looks hopeless."

"You gotta do something," Woozy sobbed. "You just can't let good old Plas kick off."

Plas smiled weakly. "I'm afraid it will take quite a bit of work to get me on my feet, Woozy," he said. "If it hadn't been for your quick thinking I wouldn't even have made it here to the hospital." He paused, gasping for breath, then continued in a halting voice: "The only man I know who could possibly help now is Gordon Gray, chief chemist at Amalgamated Products. He's helped me before."

Half an hour later Woozy returned to the hospital with the chemist.

"Hello, Plas," Gray said. "Sorry you're feeling out of sorts. Woozy wouldn't even let me shave or clean up. He insisted I come over right away."

It was late that same afternoon when Gray completed his work on the reclining body of Plastic Man. "But," he warned the ace crime-fighter, "wait a few minutes before you move. We must give this new preparation of mine time to dry."

Plastic Man nodded, then said, "While I'm lying here, Gray, maybe you can help me figure out who concocted the solvent that floored me."

"I've been giving it a lot of thought," Gray replied, "and I've come to the conclusion that the only one it could be is a Doctor Pipette, whom I had to discharge some months ago for trying to steal a formula you persuaded us to turn over to the government. I heard he started to see some shady characters after that, and I wouldn't doubt that he's in cahoots with the three thugs you saw robbing the bank yesterday."

When they left Gray's laboratory ten minutes later, Woozy pranced happily at Plastic Man's side. "Gee, it's good to have you the same old Plas," he chortled. "I was really worried."

"There's a certain doctor and three thugs whose worries may be starting very soon," Plastic Man said grimly. "I won't forget those squirt guns they used on me last night."

"Me either," said Woozy.

Not long afterward Plastic Man sprang to the porch of Doctor Pipette's house and, when no one answered his knock, reached under the door and unlocked it from the inside. Entering cautiously, he and Woozy finally arrived at the doorway to a lighted room. But, as Plastic Man crossed the threshold, the floor beneath him collapsed and he plunged into a large vat of liquid.

At the sound of the splash another door opened off the hall and four men burst out. Woozy, hiding in the shadows of the hallway, recognized three of the men as the thugs who had pulled the bank robbery the night before. The fourth man, wearing thick glasses and sporting an unruly mop of hair, Woozy assumed to be Doctor Pipette.

The fourth man looked down into the vat. "This time, Plastic Man," he said, "you won't get away. We thought you'd find out who perfected that solvent and would come here to check up. So, we set this final trap for you."

Grinning fiendishly, the man rubbed his hands. "Too bad you can't hear me now," he added. "You're just a lump of plastic."

Suddenly, to the consternation of the four criminals, the dripping face of Plastic Man loomed over them. Grasping them with a pair of gigantic hands, he lifted the men clear of the floor. "I wouldn't be so confident, my murderous friends," he said. "You see, this time I was prepared."

Later, on their way home from the FBI Woozy turned a questioning glance toward his friend. "How come the solvent started dissolving you the first time but didn't work when you fell into the vat, Plas?" he asked.

"That's a secret, Woozy my boy," Plastic Man said, grinning. "Gray treated me so that I am now permanently resistant to the solvent Pipette dreamed up. You won't have to worry about my solvency any more."
